Mike McGowan: the man whose name is on that new bridge

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

MIKE McGOWAN: After growing up on a West Capitol Avenue racetrack, he became the city's first mayor
(News-Ledger file photo)

EDITOR'S NOTE: On Friday, West Sacramento officials will cut the ribbon on a new bridge across the barge canal. The bridge is a few hundred yards west of the existing bridge that takes Jefferson Boulevard over the same canal. It will provide a new connection between Southport and the freeway and other points north.

In another year or so, the new bridge will fully connect South River Road north of the canal to Village Parkway in the south.

The bridge's name?

It will be called the "Mike McGowan Bridge," in honor of the city's first mayor.

Earlier this year, the News-Ledger sat down with McGowan for a wide-ranging chat about his experiences and service in this city. With the planned opening of the Mike McGowan Bridge this week, perhaps this is a good time to bring that interview to you.

We'll present it in multiple parts starting here this week.

It was midget car racing that brought Mike McGowan to West Sacramento in the early 1950s.

"We moved here when I was probably about five," recalled McGowan, talking from a chair in Southport's Eagle Café. "We came here from the Bay Area. My father was essentially a concessionaire. His business model was to sell beer, soda, hot dogs, popcorn and whatnot at different race tracks around the state."

At the time, West Sacramento was home to a popular track on West Capitol Avenue called the "Capital Speedway." The roar of the engines was a familiar sound in the air on Saturday nights. The speedway attracted McGowan senior.

"He liked the town, and moved us up here. It was quarter-mile dirt tracks," said McGowan, 66. "This was right after the war, and dirt track racing was becoming more and more popular. At that time, the cars were called 'midgets.' They were little open-cockpit cars, mini-roadster cars. After the war, we started seeing what we called jalopies, which were modified street cars. The guys would take all the glass out, put roll bars around them, hop up the engine and cut out the wheel wells. It was the ultimate entry-level racing, very amateur."

When the track's owner contemplated shutting it down, the elder McGowan took over as its promoter to keep it going (and kept it going into the 1970s).

"That's where I grew up," recalls Mike McGowan. "That's how I grew up – selling popcorn, cleaning the bathrooms, doing anything and everything that had to be done. It was a family business and everybody worked in some capacity."

The track provided family entertainment, he said, although "the families could be a little rough."

"Especially the jalopy types – but they were all good, hardworking people. It was a wonderful place for a kid. In those days, we could hire a 12 year old, give them a basketful of peanuts, and they could work all night and make a dollar-fifty. For me, it was also the place where I could watch this incredible array of mankind. I learned a lot. . . There were a lot of interesting characters on the racetrack!"

McGowan spent most of his elementary school years at Westmore Oaks Elementary School, then Westacres School, following that up at James Marshall High. He met his future wife, Sue, there. He graduated in 1966 and went to Sacramento City College.

But:

"I flunked out because I was in a band and having way too much fun," he

West Sac woman represents region on 'senior legislature'

CHARLOTTE DORSEY
By Al Zagofsky/News-Ledger

For three days in October, 120 members of the California Senior Legislature met in the State Capitol building to propose legislation regarding senior citizens at both state and federal levels. Charlotte Dorsey of West Sacramento attended as an Assembly Member representing Yolo County.

"I think the California Senior Legislature is extremely important," Dorsey said. "I heard a quote the other day, It was by a radio personality, he said, 'Discrimination against seniors is the only remaining acceptable discrimination.' I believe that is true."

"Until you become of that age, you do not realize how differently seniors are treated many times," she continued, "and how the existing services are not necessarily geared for seniors."

"There are a lot of ways this happens. From the way that people communicate with seniors to the kinds of laws that are put in place that may or may not include support for seniors."

"Everything from putting in sidewalks and making sure that the handicap ramps are kept in working order—so that when people go from a sidewalk to a street, there isn't a pothole in the bottom of a ramp."

The California Senior Legislature was established by state law to help preserve and enhance the quality of life for older Californians and their families, and is primarily funded by the Code 402 checkoff on the California State Income Tax form.

Forty Senior Senators and eighty Senior Assembly members are selected in elections in 33 planning service areas as established by the federal Older Americans Act of 1965. Area 4/Yolo County, is represented by Senior Senators: Gloria Plasencia - Foresthill, and Lola Young - Sacramento; and Senior Assembly Members: Seth Brunner - Davis, Charlotte Dorsey - West Sacramento, Pam Epley - Arcata, and Lynne Farrell - Lincoln.

Dorsey first became acquainted with the CSL early last year through her involvement with the Area 4 Agency on Aging Advisory Council. She and fellow Assembly Member Seth

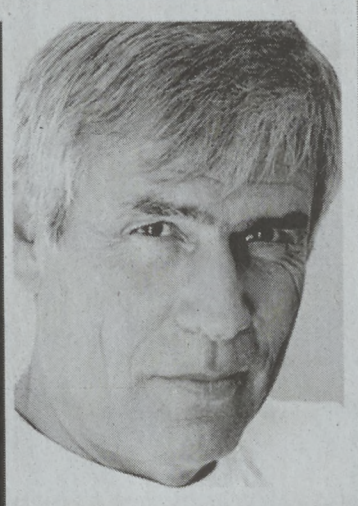
My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

I was talking to a friend the other day when out of nowhere she said, "You know, I really don't like my children very much lately, and isn't that a terrible thing for a mother to say?"

"Not really," I replied, having often wanted to strangle one or more of my four kids on a pretty regular basis when they were younger.

"Maybe it's just a stage they're going through or something," she continued, "but one of them is always doing that 'you can't make me do anything I don't want to do' thing, and the other one keeps trying to drag me into confrontational arguments where she wants to establish the fact that she is much smarter than I am. They were such lovely girls when they were younger and I just can't understand what has happened to them."

"How old are they now?" I asked.

"Sixteen and fourteen, although they think they are a lot older."

"Well," I said, "that's a big part of the problem right there, since the teenage years end up driving most of us parents a little nuts."

"How did you survive it?" she asked with interest. "I mean, did you have long talks with your children or did you try group counseling or did you just wait for them to mature and grow up a little bit?"

"Actually, I used money."

"Money?"

"Yes, cold hard cash. It's the American way, you know."

"You're kidding?" she said, smiling for the first time since our conversation had begun.

"No, I'm being very serious. You see, in today's world the one thing the vast majority of teenagers need and don't have is disposable income. In fact, of all the different age groups in this country, teenagers are the poorest, yet they are always in desperate need of everything from tennis shoes with the names of star basketball players on them to every kind of expensive electronic gadget imaginable, not to mention designer clothes and every hair and skin product known to man when it comes to teenage girls. So consumerism starts ruling the lives of kids much earlier than it did when we were young, and a wise parent can definitely use it to their advantage."

"How so?"

"Well, in my case, I used what I called a good kid's dividend."

"You mean you gave them a regular allowance?"

"Oh, no, you have to really make it worth their while, so we're talking about a lot more money than a regular old monthly allowance, especially since kids nowadays think of an allowance as an inalienable right. So what I actually did was set aside some of the extra money I used to make from painting houses during the summers when my kids were young and then I passed it out at Christmas time in one lump sum if they had all met a pretty strenuous set of criteria. For instance, if the boys had successfully made it through the year without taking up smoking or drinking and had stayed away from drugs and not spent any time in jail or gotten anyone pregnant, they earned their dividend. And most of those same goals also applied to my daughter, although she had the extra added task of not fighting with her mother, which she seemed to love to do."

"So, that's your advice?" asked my friend with obvious concern. "Pay your children for better behavior?"

"Actually," I said, "if you're asking for advice, I would tell you to stop worrying so much about your teenage daughters, since all the real parenting is done in the first five or so years or a child's life anyway, and after that, us parents are a whole lot less important than we think we are. And when they get to be teenagers, the genes they've inherited and their peers pretty much take over most of the rest of the task of deciding who our kids are going to ultimately become. Now that doesn't mean we're not supposed to love them to death and do our very best to keep them on the right path, but in reality, teenagers need to start marching to their own drummer, and we parents need to stop putting all of our eggs into their basket. You have a life to live, too, you know."

If the boys had successfully made it through the year without taking up smoking or drinking and had stayed away from drugs, and not spent any time in jail or gotten anyone pregnant, they earned their 'dividend.'

"I think it's true that somewhere along the line I somehow became their chauffer, cook, maid, homework-aide, ATM machine and all-around slave, so I know what you mean about pouring all of my energy into them. And maybe that's what I'm feeling – some resentment for having put so much time and effort into them only to have them start behaving like a couple of spoiled little brats."

"Most of us parents fall into that trap," I said. "But if you really want to be a happy parent during your daughter's teenage years, simply enjoy them when they are being lovely, and don't take it too personal when they are being horrid. And start dedicating more of your time and energy to yourself and your own life, since the last time I looked, you only get one of those! And if that doesn't work, there's always adoption or running away and joining the circus."

remembers. (He still plays drums in a popular local band).

That was during the Vietnam War, and there was a draft going on. McGowan rated high on the draft list.

"I was classified 1A, and I didn't want to be drafted, so I joined the Marine Corps," he chuckled. "That was a 19-year old's logic."

But he said the decision to join up was really a little more complicated than that. At college, McGowan had met some returned veterans and had been impressed.

"None of them had been in a war zone, but they had these great stories about being in Germany, or wherever they had been stationed. . . I believed at the time that this (war) was going to be my generation's story. And I didn't want to be 50 years old, sitting around when guys are telling their story, and I didn't have one."

"There was anti-war sentiment, there were protests, there were people going to Canada" to avoid the draft," he added. "But West Sacramento in 1966-67 was a very patriotic, blue-collar, middle class town. VFW (the patriotic Veterans of Foreign Wars organization) loomed large in our world."

"Most of our fathers had been in the war – not that they were rah-rah for us to go," he continued. "My friend's father, who had been in the Pacific in World War II, was basically telling me 'don't go, you don't want to go to war.' But at 19, I was invincible."

McGowan was sent into the Marines and "lucked out," he said. He was assigned to artillery, and was a section chief for a 105 millimeter Howitzer gun for 13 months, mostly in 1968.

He came home from Vietnam in one piece and turned Sue Barber into Sue McGowan. Then:

"I went to work for PG&E as a field clerk," McGowan recalled. "I'm proud to say I was the world's worst field clerk. It was a terrible job. I was sitting there one day, talking to a co-worker, and all he did every day was talk about retirement. I was 21 years old, working, trying to start my family. I had this epiphany, that I did not want to be sitting here at 38 (like that coworker) counting the years to retirement. I decided, 'I'm getting out now.'"

He went back to school on the GI bill, graduating from Sacramento State and then from McGeorge School of Law.

"I wasn't a master student, but I got through," said McGowan. "I opened my own office January 1, 1977, just about where the massage parlor is over by West Sacramento Land Company (near Merkley and Jefferson). I wound up doing almost extensively indigent defense. I was a private attorney but I was doing public defender work, both in Yolo and Sacramento. I was doing lots and lots of trials, which I truly enjoyed."

McGowan kept a hand in his practice through his later years on the West Sacramento City Council, and into his the first years of his service on the Yolo County Board of Supervisors. He had a partner only briefly, but shared an office at various times with Clark Cameron and with Doris Shockley (who later became a Yolo judge).

Meanwhile, what's now the City of West Sacramento was really just a group of neighborhoods in what was called "East Yolo," governed by the county supervisors in Woodland. It was a troubled area, and dissatisfaction was brewing. There were a couple of failed attempts at shaping part of the area into a new city.

McGowan was still in college in 1976 when one of those efforts sprouted and dried up.

"I had virtually no role," he said. "As a matter of fact, I went to some hearings with (the late activist) Grace Ohlson. I wound up writing a paper about the incorporation."

Then, in 1986, a new incorporation effort sprang up. This one was championed by a variety of people, including enthusiastic citizens. Developers and other businesspeople provided most of the campaign funds.

"The motivation primarily was that we were sending a lot of tax money over there (to Yolo County), and we weren't liking what we were getting back," remembered McGowan. "Also, we don't need those folks from Davis and Woodland telling us how to live our lives."

The community also was unhappy with crime and the services provided by the county sheriff's department, and it was fed up with the "sin city" character of its decaying main street, West Capitol Avenue. That was a place were prostitutes were commonplace and respectable people didn't linger.

"There was a growing dissatisfaction with the sheriff's department and the way they were treating us," said McGowan. "Rod Graham was the sheriff at that particular time and he didn't have anything good to say about us."

Also, McGowan said, "there's no question that development – the monied interests that are here – wanted to have greater influence over the governing body and would rather have a group of local policy makers than have to go to Woodland and Davis to get their stuff approved. . . This successful incorporation was, as you know, significantly backed by development money and the business community – (Frank) Ramos, (Tom) Raley. Those folks over here, for a variety of reasons that were not all self-serving. But certainly there was a feeling that hey, we want to have our own team here to work with."

McGowan gives credit to people like County Supervisor Clark Cameron (an "unsung hero" of the effort) and Jake Misfedt (who actually "wasn't a fan of incorporation") for paving the way for the separate communities of Bryte, Broderick, "old" West Sacramento and Southport to become one city. They laid groundwork including arranging a county incorporation study and consolidating the various communities' water and fire services.

Cameron also helped create a "redevelopment agency" in what later became West Sacramento, drawing out a large mapped-out area which would help keep in more of its property tax money local to pay to fight blight. The city kept that agency until recently, and although some aspects of it were controversial, the redevelopment agency helped to fund many of the city's bridges, roads and other infrastructure.

"There was an evolution, then there was a revolution," said McGowan.

At the same time voters were asked to vote up or down on incorporation in November of 1986, they were asked to choose from a slate of candidates who would serve as the first five people on the city council.

"It was a beauty contest – a popularity contest," he remarked with a chuckle.

McGowan was on that list, and he drew the most votes. Does that mean he won the beauty contest?

"Go figure that one out!," he answered.

Today's elections in West Sacramento are fairly sophisticated, with money raised and spent and most of the campaigning done with mailers and other impersonal communication. Then, it was different.

"I wasn't politically involved when I ran for city council," said McGowan. "I was sitting there watching everybody else sign up for this thing. I was thinking, 'I know this guy, I know that guy, I can do a better job than they can.' And I thought it would be fun. I'd do one term and get out."

As for some of the other candidates:

"Ben Davis was the only candidate who ran opposed to incorporation, but he wasn't able to articulate that in a very effective way," McGowan remembers. "And then Mike Zimmerman, a barber, was in it, Fred Pierini was in it, Bob Mahalisin was in it – it was 21 people It was the best campaign I've ever been in. We were making it up, no one knew what they were doing."

"We'd go to candidates' nights," he recalled. "There were about 12 or 13 of us who were serious, and we'd go to the candidates forums and then we'd all go to dinner afterwards, and say 'yeah, I got you on that one!' and 'yeah, you didn't know the answer to that question, but I did!' And then on election night, instead of going to our own little camps, we all went to the El Rancho (a hotel near the current city hall) and watched the results come in together. It was entirely different atmosphere."

Turnout was high, and incorporation passed with an approval rating that was "off the charts.". The new council was scheduled to take office and take charge of a city just a half-year later – in January, 1987. Questions about everything from land uses to policing would fall on their laps. The other council members-elect agreed that McGowan, top vote-getter in that election, would be the first mayor.

"Being the first mayor, to this day, is the most fun I ever had," said McGowan. "It was fantastic."

Next week: Finding some police, fighting zoning wars.

ner were appointed to represent Yolo County currently on the Council. The Council elected Dorsey as a CSL Senior Assembly Member.

"The California Senior Legislature was proposed in 1979, and its first session was convened in 1981," Dorsey explained. "You have to be over 60, and be elected by your peers."

"There are limited voices for seniors in the state and in the country," she noted. "There are not many like the CSL—and it's all volunteers."

"Without the CSL, there would be fewer voices for seniors," Dorsey concluded. "They would be forgotten."

Police were dispatched to a location (withheld by police) for the report of a battery.

They heard yelling from a man and woman inside the mobilehome at the address.

The man told an officer that the woman had "jumped on his lap and began to scratch his face." He had scratches on his face, with dripping blood.

The woman "stated (he) pushed her down, however she could not articulate how the events happened." The woman had a red mark of possible injury.

The man said both had been drinking.

Photos were taken. Police believed the woman to be the "dominant aggressor," and she was booked.

Nov. 29, 2:28 p.m.

An officer stopped a suspect (identity withheld by police) for a license plate violation.

The driver was interviewed about his current gang affiliation, and a photo was taken of the man's new gang tattoos. He was found in possession of a license plate that he said did not belong to him. A police officer driving through a department store parking lot on Riverpoint Court ran a check on the plates of a dark Honda seen parked across two parking spots. The plates showed as "lost or stolen."

Meanwhile, the Honda drove away and the officer lost sight of it during a turn. Then the vehicle parked, and the officer saw a man and woman exit it and go into a store. The officer then ran the car's VIN, which showed no alerts. Dispatchers contacted the car's registered owner, though, and the owner reported that the car had been stolen but not yet reported.

The officer contacted the man and woman at the store checkout counter. Loss prevention officers at the store provided video showing the man and woman exiting the vehicle in the parking lot.

After being read his rights, the car's driver, a 32-year old Antelope man, admitted stealing the car. He also had a warrant. He went to jail.

Nov. 30, 8:35 a.m.

A police officer spotted a 22-year old Walnut Street woman walking eastbound on the 800-block of West Capitol Avenue. He recognized her from a booking photo and knew there was a felony warrant for the woman's arrest. She was jailed.

Nov. 30, 3:15 p.m.

An officer responding to a vehicle burglary in progress saw a man inside the cab of a Ford F150 pickup truck inside a locked gate at an Evergreen Avenue property. The side window of the truck was broken. The officer saw the man "reaching around the cab."

A witness reported having seen the suspect earlier "banging on the side" of the vehicle.

The truck's registered owner was contacted and said he did not know the suspect and the man, a 53-year old transient, did not have permission to access the truck.

About $400 in damage was done and two stolen tools were recovered. The suspect was arrested.

COUCH THEATER DVD PREVIEWS
BY SAM STRUCKHOFF

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" (PG-13) -- With the city under the heel of the ruthless Foot Clan, our best hope lies in four grotesque heroes rising from the sewers of 1980s and '90s pop culture. The team of turtles -- that's Leonardo, Donatello, Michaelangelo and Raphael -- spew groan-worthy one-liners while leaping from explosions and fighting various thugs. The series' supervillain, Shredder, gets a sharp robo-suit instead of the usual metal-plated outfit.

While this reviewer will never forget the role The Turtles played in his younger years, this is sadly one of the most forgettable flicks of the summer. Even big-budget action flicks cashing in on highly marketable nostalgic action franchises need to have a little charm, a pinch of originality. While the action flashes continually on screen, the genuine thrills are brief and far between.

Leonardo in "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles"

"Maze Runner" (PG-13) -- In another adaptation of a young-adult novel, we find familiar issues handled in a slightly new way. Thomas (Dylan O'Brien) wakes up in an unfamiliar place, apparently dropped off with a colony of other stranded teenage boys inhabiting what they call The Glades. Thomas falls in with a group of boys who run through a nearby mechanized maze -- a huge complex that's full of traps and nasty critters. Thomas and the others struggle to stay alive, reclaim their lost memories and to make sense what has happened to them.

There is a fun aspect to watching the characters strive against the contrived challenges of their world. With a steady trickle of tantalizing plot development, you might get hooked -- like TV's "Lost" -- into watching how this dark fictional world unfolds.

"This is Where I Leave You" (R) -- With an awesome A-list cast, this family drama-comedy is a bit of a let down. Jason Bateman and Tina Fey (both Emmy-winners with great histories of down-to-earth comedy) headline as siblings in a fraught family that just lost their father. Dad's last wish is to have the whole family -- four adult siblings and Mom (Jane Fonda) -- sit shiva and mourn together for seven days. The twist is that, of course, these people can barely stand each other under the weight of so much baggage. With all of this emotion and cast to carry it, the film relies too much on slapstick and low-end gags.

"Skeleton Twins" (R) -- In a different dramedy about adult siblings forced into a reluctant reunion, two different comedic actors make a much better effort. Former "SNL" campaigners Bill Hader and Kristen Wiig play a pair of fraternal twins who were close throughout childhood, but have separated to different sides of the country in adulthood. Pulled together by forces outside of their control, together the twins must face all the ways their lives have not gone to plan. Among many troubles, Milo (Hader) is not the A-list actor he'd dreamed of being, and Maggie (Wiig) is facing disillusionment in her marriage.

"Texts From Jane Eyre" by Mallory Ortberg (Henry Holt and Co., $23) Reviewed by Ealish Waddell

Updated versions of classic stories are nothing new, but the recently released "Texts From Jane Eyre" offers a pretty innovative take on the genre: If characters from classic books were real, and they had access to data plans, what would they text?

From ancient myths to Harry Potter, and Jane Austen to "The Hunger Games," famous fictional figures have been retrofitted with smartphones and the worldview of a particularly cynical 21st-century twentysomething. The resulting epistles make for hilarious glimpses into their not-so-everyday lives through a lens that is extremely warped but still crystal-clear.

Text messages have a shorthand language all their own, and Ortberg employs it deftly to subtly indicate personality traits and narrative nuances. Of course, the dramatic Edward Rochester types in ALL CAPS. Of course, flirty Scarlett O'Hara is into sexting. Of course, the Lorax won't shut up about composting. Typos and bad grammar abound (you try to type neatly when a raven won't stop staring at you). It might sound ridiculous, and it often is, but it's also really funny.

Given the concentrated nature of the vignettes, the effect is strongest when the reader actually knows the story being skewered -- the spotlight here is mostly pointed at characters, not plots. But even unfamiliar tales can benefit from a good goosing, highlighting common themes that run again and again through literature from ancient times to the most modern works.

The high-school English class staples are here, like "Wuthering Heights" and "Great Expectations," but so are "Sweet Valley High" and "The Babysitters Club." And you might be surprised at how much they have in common.

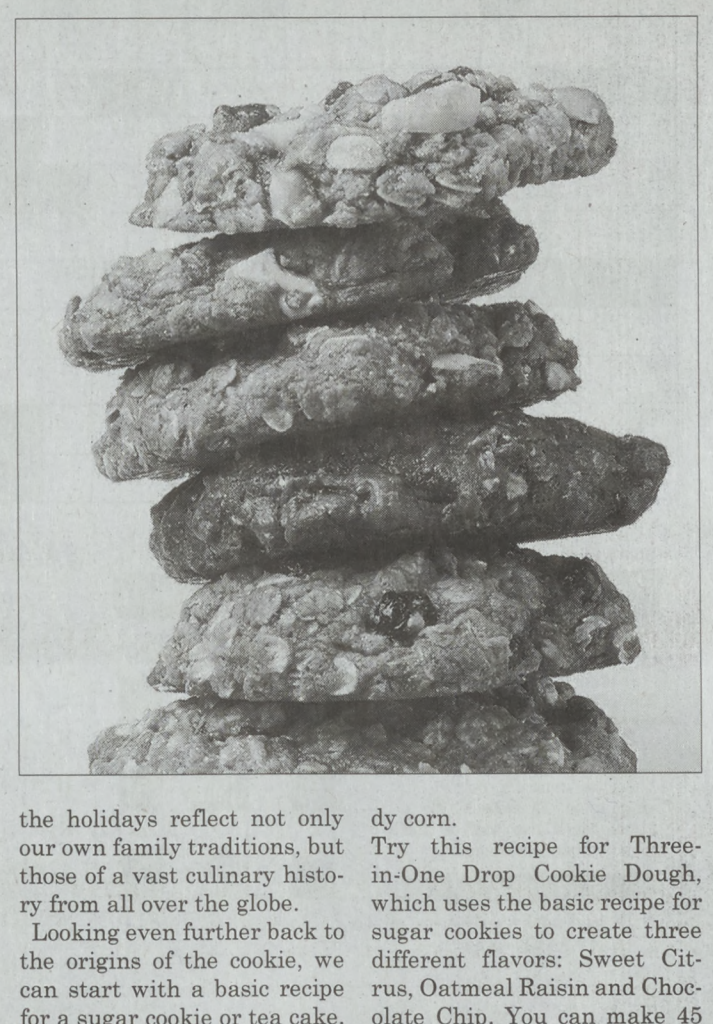
The Kitchen Diva BY Angela Shelf Medearis



Cookie Time!

Of all the traditional baked confections we associate with the holidays, probably none is more popular than the cookie. During the holiday season, old recipes are pulled out -- or special orders are placed -- for a staggering and beautiful array of cookies in all sizes, shapes, colors and flavors. America is a melting pot, and there is no time when this is more evident than the holidays. Cookies from around the world make appearances at family celebrations or as gifts for friends and neighbors.

If you follow the cookie trail in the United States, it will take you back to Colonial times, when the first record of a recipe for a "Christmas Cookey" can be found. The ingredients listed in the American Cookery recipe of 1797 note flour, sugar, butter, milk, powdered coriander and "pearlash," a leavening agent made by soaking fireplace ashes in water to produce lye. It was a jumping off point to what has become a long-held and much-loved tradition.

Cookies were brought to our country by the Europeans who settled here. Christmas cookie trees were a German invention. Highly decorative shortbread or sugar cookies were a gift from the Dutch. As America grew, so did her immigrant population. Today, the cookies we bake during the holidays reflect not only our own family traditions, but those of a vast culinary history from all over the globe.

Looking even further back to the origins of the cookie, we can start with a basic recipe for a sugar cookie or tea cake. Many other cookies recipes from around the world have evolved from these simple ingredients.

It is believed that hundreds of years ago, sugar cookies originated with the process of testing a cake recipe. Small spoonfuls of batter were baked to check for flavor and consistency. Shortbread cookies began life in ancient times as slightly sweetened biscuits. From there -- with the additions of butter, fruits and chocolate, sprinkles and colored sugar -- things went wild. Modern cookies are an unlimited variety of textures and flavors from bacon to candy corn.

Try this recipe for Three-in-One Drop Cookie Dough, which uses the basic recipe for sugar cookies to create three different flavors: Sweet Citrus, Oatmeal Raisin and Chocolate Chip. You can make 45 cookies (15 of each flavor) using the simple, delicious ingredients below. Happy holidays!

THREE-IN-ONE DROP COOKIE DOUGH

1 cup (2 sticks) unsalted butter, softened
3/4 cup dark brown sugar
1/2 cup granulated sugar
2 eggs
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt

For Sweet Citrus Cookies:
Zest of 1/2 lemon
Zest of 1/2 lime
Zest of 1/2 orange
1/4 cup sugar for sprinkling on top

For Oatmeal-Raisin Cookies:
1/4 cup, plus 2 tablespoons rolled oats
1/4 cup, plus 2 tablespoons raisins

For Chocolate Chip Cookies:
3/4 cup chocolate chips

1. Preheat the oven to 325 F.
2. Line three baking sheet with parchment paper. Set aside.
3. In the bowl of mixer (or using a bowl and a handmixer), set on medium speed, cream together the butter and sugars until light and fluffy -- approximately 5 minutes. Add eggs and vanilla extract and continue to mix one minute. Add flour, baking soda and salt, and continue to mix until well-combined.
4. Divide the dough into three equal parts in three separate mixing bowls. Add the flavoring ingredients: the citrus zest in one bowl, reserving the sugar to sprinkle on top; the oatmeal and raisins in the second bowl; and the chocolate chips in the last bowl. Mix the ingredients in each bowl with a rubber spatula until well-combined.
5. Spoon teaspoon-sized drops onto the baking sheets, about 2 inches apart. Sprinkle the Sweet Citrus cookies with the sugar.
6. Bake each batch of cookies for 5 minutes, and rotate/turn the pan to bake the cookies evenly. Bake for another 3 to 5 minutes or until the cookies are golden brown and are slightly soft in the center. Let cool at room temperature. Makes 45 cookies (one batch of dough, 15 of each flavor).

You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, this information can be obtained from one of the following three companies: LPS Agency Sales and Posting at (714) 730-2727, or visit the Internet Web site www.servicelinkASAP.com (Registration required to search for sale information) or Priority Posting and Publishing at (714) 573-1965 or visit the Internet Web site www.prioritypostng.com (Click on the link for "Advanced Search" to search for sale information), or auction.com at 1-800-280-2832 or visit the Internet Web site www.auction.com, using the Trustee Sale No. shown above. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. A-4498526 12/03/2014, 12/10/2014, 12/17/2014

Submission of Proposals: All proposals must be submitted not later than the time prescribed. Public Contract Code section 20103.5: In all contracts subject to this part where federal funds are involved, no bid submitted shall be invalidated by the failure of the bidder to be licensed in accordance with the laws of this state. However, at the time the contract is awarded, the contractor shall be properly licensed in accordance with the laws of this state. The first payment for work or material under any contract shall not be made unless and until the Registrar of Contractors verifies to the agency that the records of the Contractors' State License Board indicate that the contractor was properly licensed at the time the contract was awarded. Any bidder or contractor not so licensed shall be subject to all legal penalties imposed by law, including, but not limited to, any appropriate disciplinary action by the Contractors' State License Board. The agency shall include a statement to that effect in the standard form of prequalification questionnaire and financial statement. The applicant is seeking approval of a five year time extension for Conditional Use Permit (CUP) No. 02-02 that is due to expire December 31, 2014. CUP 02-02 was originally approved for the operation and offloading of ethanol rail cars. The ethanol is delivered to the existing bulk petroleum fuel storage and distribution operation at the Buckeye Terminals, LLC facility located at 1700 South River Road (APN 58-270-01).
